Former John Laing Infrastructure Fund (JLIF) investment advisor Andrew Charlesworth is considering raising a new fund focused on US and European infrastructure, Infracommunity has confirmed.

Infracommunity in May 2017 reported that Charlesworth had been seeking to pursue opportunities in the global infrastructure market following his departure. It is understood that the new fund will be a listed vehicle that will focus on a wide range of infrastructure projects including public-private opportunities in the sector.

Charlesworth declined to comment on the fund.

Charlesworth currently works for a firm called Capital and Asset Management. He had been an informal advisor to the White House transition team, as well as a member of the first US-China infrastructure delegation.
